

Meet Our Crew

Director

Elizabeth Phillips

Elizabeth Phillips is a Nashville-based filmmaker who is dedicated to the art of storytelling. As a Director, Phillips aims to capture the essence of the human experience, delving into the complexities of emotions, relationships, and struggles. Her visual style is distinct and evocative, bringing her unique perspective to the screen. With a keen eye for detail and a passion for creating powerful narratives, Phillips weaves together stories that resonate with audiences on a deeper level. Through her films, she invites viewers on a journey, exploring universal themes and shedding light on diverse perspectives.

Producer

Keisha Martin

Keisha Martin is an artist and filmmaker currently whose narrative films explore the stories of women. Her experimental films focus more on the creation of images utilizing different visual mediums and then digitizing them. Exploring animation, stop motion, 16mm, projection, and so on. As creative at heart Keisha strives to bring the world of filmmaking to others so that they too may find their own creative voice.

DP

Tate Bailey

Tate Bailey recently graduated from Belmont University's film school and has a passion for creating documentaries. As a cinematographer, she is still exploring her style and is keen to work on diverse projects for her friends to gain experience and expand her knowledge.

Sound Mixer

Blake Burke

Blake Burke is a freelance filmmaker who graduated from the Bowling Green State University with a bachelor's in film production. For the last four years, he's worked in many roles including Art, production, grip, and electric. His main specification of work was sound production for most of that time. He uses this to help create the best film experience possible.
